

NAVAL POLICY TOLD IN SPEECHES

Iowa, of Vermont, of Tennessee, and Connecticut.

"The popular mind must not be permitted by any act or word to have such an idea, the policy must be free of selfishness. If we get a larger navy, the people must realize that we need it, not because we have the vanity to boast of our proud navy dominating the sea, not for naval glory, never for aggression, never for conquest, and never to use it to take away what belongs to others, never as a means of threat, never to employ it to obtain colonies, or to change the policy of our government from one of a self-governing people to one whose influence is to be one of exploitation.

Former Boastful Attitude.

"The day was America, in its youth and in the exuberance of its self-confidence, had the 4th of July attitude toward everything it possessed, and was rather inclined to emulate the champion wrestler at the county court who bragged that he could whip anybody on the green, and in some instances this boast may be called a swaggering one, which is not now in keeping with the grown-up men, which our republic has become. But while the whole attitude of boastfulness is not to be perpetuated, it had its virtues as well as its vices.

"The man who is confident and self-reliant is apt to put up a strong fight, if he has to fight and make good his boast, and I am not sure that the spirit of self-reliance and confidence is not a much better attitude for America, under wise as it may seem, than an attitude in which we are endangering ourselves in the eyes of the world of underestimating and minimizing our strength and incorrectly advertising ourselves as weaklings.

"How must the public be informed? Information must come by the department, disseminating through every channel, and not from official reports alone. It must be correct and full; it must be given out with some human interest; the popular imagination must be appealed to. There is not a hamlet or village in America where the youth do not grow up with deep interest in the navy and its achievements. They must be made to know that the nation behind the gun today is just as well equipped, just as able as the man who made the battle of Lake Erie and of Manila Bay and of Santiago famous.

"The people on the inside, knowing the great needs and having the expert knowledge, have one angle, while the people on the outside, lacking this expert knowledge and the intimate information, are apt to take the other extreme. But in the matter of naval development and strength, the men who are directly charged with the control of the navy cannot be blind to the fact that the people on the outside have a knowledge of many things that are of value. This knowledge may be crude, but it is fresh and original. There must be cooperation. People must be invited to make suggestions and to criticize. The public officer who does not like suggestions and criticisms has no business in the public service, whether it be the man who puts coal in the Dreadnought or the man in the White House.

Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, U. S. N., replied to the toast, "The Fleet," and said that an efficient fleet is the end for which departments, bureaus, and navy yards are created. Admiral Fiske made a strong plea for a greater navy, and said that everything worth having in this country must be protected.

In the absence of Secretary of Commerce Redfield, Secretary of Labor Wilson was called upon to express his views. He said that without labor there is no commerce, and without commerce there is no need for a navy. Mr. Wilson said there were not sufficient well-drilled men in the navy to handle the ships. He urged a change in the standard of men and wages of those who compose the crews engaged on vessels of the merchant marine.

Representative Joshua Alexander, in his toast on "The Outlook for a Merchant Marine," said that the future of an American merchant marine was very promising. He said "we will never have an adequate navy until we have an adequate merchant marine, the outlook for which is very bright."

A letter from Cardinal Gibbons was read, in which he said that although he is a man of peace he favors a navy commensurate with the greatness of the country. Letters endorsing the league's work were read from James Gordon Bennett, Bishop James B. Fumston, of Idaho, and the American Peace Arbitration League.

NEW CHAMPIONS IN DOG WORLD

Deodora Monarch, a Bulldog, and Dainty Mite, Pomeranian, Win Their Degrees.

CROWDS ATTEND SHOW

Fox Hounds to Be Judged This Afternoon—Parade to Be Held Tonight.

Impudent Boston terriers, dancing all over the judging ring in their excitement and half choking themselves as they endeavored to satisfy a craving for battle that would do credit to much larger dogs, were successful bidders for the popular favor last night at the second session of the Washington Kennel Club's show at the Arcade.

A composite picture of a miniature prairie bull was under inspection when the show could see during the time that the Boston terriers held the stage. Some of the dogs danced on hind legs and some on fore legs, but all of them danced. That their code of barks contained no expletives expressive enough to describe their emotions at the foolish affair is the only reason advanced for their silence, for most of the dogs contented themselves with an occasional raising of their brows and a slight elevation of their noses.

A. G. Rohr judged the Boston bulls, and beyond an occasional expression of surprise as the dog under inspection would leave the stand and disappear apparently into space, he seemed to have little trouble in focusing on the candidates for ribbons. Seemingly grown used to being gazed at, the dogs were less noisy than on the opening day.

Beyond a vocal battle between the collies and English setters, there was comparatively quiet. The many barks of these dogs sent spectators rushing to the section containing the would-be combatants.

When things had reached such a stage that the settlers tried to enter the enemy's camp by jumping over the back of the bench to which they were chained, the St. Bernards joined the chorus. Their deep warnings appeared to sober the belligerents, who stopped their barks as quickly as though they understood a message to the effect that the St. Bernards would start a real battle unless permitted to sleep.

In hunting costume, masters of fox hounds will lead their packs to the judging ring this afternoon. At 4 o'clock, the "unclassified specials," or prize dogs of all classes, will be judged. Blue bloods among the dogs will parade at 5 o'clock this evening, when champions, or dogs who have reached the highest pinnacle possible to dogdom, will be walked around the floor. Two new champions were made during the present show. Deodora Monarch, a bulldog, owned by Robert Lobban, of Newark, N. J., and Dainty Mite, Pomeranian, the property of Mrs. E. S. Ayres, were the quadrupeds who won their degrees.

ALLIES MAY GO TO WAR.

Greeks and Bulgars May Split Over Saloniki.

London, April 11.—The Chronicle Vienna correspondent learns:

"There is a danger of a new war breaking out between the allies themselves. Bulgaria and Greece are fast drifting into armed conflict over Saloniki. Both sides are massing troops in that district to support their claims. 'France and Russia are said to support Greece's claims to the seaport, but the other powers favor Bulgaria.'"

BORLAND RAPS THE DISTRICT

Yet you have not been able to get universal transfers."

There is no general agitation against these conditions, the Representative said, yet the citizens of a Western city would not submit to them.

Should Develop Water Power.

"You have at your door," he went on, "a great natural power, for which you could draw energy to light all the homes of your city and run its street cars. You could obtain electric energy from Great Falls for two cents a kilowatt hour. Yet you can't use it. Congress ought to give it to you."

"There is a vast mass of wealth in the District," he said, "that escapes taxation. There is no inheritance tax here; there is no tax on intangible personal property. Men with vast fortunes acquire residence in Washington to dodge tax on this class of property. People of their home communities know this and brand the citizens of Washington as accomplices, however unfair this charge may be. There is an abundance of taxable wealth in this city, which, if the burdens were adjusted, would be sufficient to make care of all improvements, even on the largest scale. You do not agitate for these things you really should demand."

Mr. Borland said that the District should have a representative in Congress; it should have an inheritance tax, a tax on intangible personal property, it should have a board of public works, controlling the improvements and partly in command of the people. He made a strong point of the unequal distributions of improvements in the District, saying that three sections were contributing toward the splendor of one. He advised the citizens to act together and come before their committees in Congress often to counsel with their members and push schemes for the city's welfare. Citizens of the District only appear before the committees," he added, "when they have an ax to grind."

By unanimous vote the association endorsed its president, Louis F. Shoemaker, for District Commissioner, and provided for a letter to President Wilson informing him of its action. Representative Borland commended the association on recommending its president for place as one of the heads of the District government, and complimented Mr. Shoemaker highly. Several resolutions calling for minor improvements were passed at the business meeting.

At Great Falls the Conduit Road forms the connecting link for a continuous driveway back to the city.

This highway, which is rapidly nearing completion, will compare favorably with any thoroughfare in the country and form a delightful addition to the numerous driveways about the National Capital.

Bradley Hills comprises about 4,000 acres of beautiful, rolling country, knolls, valleys, and dells. Some is beautifully wooded; all is picturesque and interesting.
